The California Commission on the Status of Women, an independent state agency, represents over 50% of California's population. It is the only agency specifically dedicated to protecting the interests of California women and girls, working to ensure women have equal rights and opportunity and that enacted legislation does not discriminate against women or otherwise undermine their status or their opportunities.

Established in 1965 as an Advisory Commission under former Governor Pat Brown, then signed into law as a permanent Commission by former Governor Ronald Reagan in 1971, the Commission is charged to study, develop recommendations, and advise the Governor and the Legislature on inequities in laws, practices and conditions that affect women. Commissioners are appointed by the Governor, the President Pro Tem of the Senate, and the Speaker of the Assembly. The Superintendent of Public Education and the Labor Commissioner are statutory members.

To carry out its mandate, the Commission:

- ☼ Holds hearings and legislative briefings on issues impacting women and girls.
- ☼ Conducts research and publishes reports on issues related to women.
- ☼ Provides testimony and participates in public and legislative committee hearings.
- ☼ Makes presentations, conducts workshops, and advises other agencies and women's organizations on issues affecting women and girls.
- ☼ Initiates and supports statewide coalitions in providing positive direction on issues of importance to women.
- ☼ Reviews all bills introduced in each legislative session, advising the Governor, the Legislature and the public on legislation significant to women.
- ☼ Publishes an annual Summary of New Laws Affecting Women and disseminates periodic updates and alerts on important issues.
- ☼ Participates in, monitors, and appoints members to the State Advisory Committee on Sexual Assault Victim Services and Prevention Programs in conjunction with the Office of Emergency Services.
